Preface

The Mughal empire, at its height, possessed a highly unified and systematized bureaucratic apparatus, the central point in which was the manṣab or numerical rank. The manṣab defined the status and income of the holder; he could be posted anywhere and be assigned any appointment in almost any branch of administration. Much of the inner political history of the empire therefore centred on the grants of manṣabs and appointments to offices. There is obvious need, then, to compile a record of these awards in chronological order. For the identification of individuals, the awards of titles (by which thenceforth they came to be known) is also of considerable importance.

The present work is a chronological record of the awards of rank (manṣabs), offices and titles in the Mughal empire, compiled from all possible sources. I have planned it in two volumes, the present covering the reigns of Akbar, Jahāngīr and Shāh Jahān. For the reign of Akbar, I have begun from A.D. 1573–4, the year when ranks or manṣabs were introduced. Volume II will cover the reign of Aurangzeb (1659–1707). By providing cross-references, I hope to enable the reader to reconstruct the political career of any individual Mughal officer from his first known appointment to his death. The cross-references are, however, confined to reign-periods. The three indexes will help the reader to trace a particular individual from one reign to the next.

The plan was suggested to me by my friend and colleague, Professor Irfan Habib, and I must express my deep sense of gratitude for all he has done to make the writing of this work possible. I have also obtained constant inspiration from Professor S. Nurul Hasan's sympathetic interest in my work.

The scheme of the Apparatus of Empire took final shape

when I was awarded the Smuts Fellowship at the University of Cambridge for one year (1974–5) to work on the polity of the Mughal empire. During my stay at Cambridge I received generous hospitality from my friend, the late Professor Eric Stokes.

I am grateful to the members of the Advisory Committee of the Centre of Advanced Study, and especially to Professor Satish Chandra, for their decision to support the publication of this work.

The staff of the following libraries have helped me in collecting my source material: the Maulana Azad Library, Aligarh; the India Office Library, the British Museum and the Libraries of the Royal Asiatic Society, and the School of Oriental and African Studies, London; the Cambridge University Library; the Bodleian, Oxford; and the Bibliothèque Nationale, Paris. I am also grateful to the staff of the Andhra Pradesh Archives for their assistance when I was working in the Archives.

I have used the Research Library of my own department extensively and I should like to thank Mr Jalal Abbas Abbasi, our Librarian, and his colleagues.

From Mr Iqtidar Alam Khan I have received several criticisms and suggestions; and I should like to thank my colleagues Dr Shireen Moosvi, Ms Nalini Taneja, Dr Afzal Husain and Mr Muhammad Afzal Khan, for their help in checking the proofs and in other matters.

I am deeply grateful to the Oxford University Press for the interest they have taken in the production of this work.

Finally, I must acknowledge my deep gratitude to my wife, Firuza Khātun, for her indulgence and patience during the writing of this book.

Introduction

THE MANṢAB

Modern students of the Mughal empire have shown increasing awareness of the immense degree of systematization that was a characteristic feature of the empire. In the main that systematization was the work of its greatest emperor, Akbar (A.D. 1556–1605). The Mughal polity, so long as it functioned with any effectiveness, say, until the early years of the eighteenth century, continued basically with the organizational forms that Akbar instituted.

The most striking aspect of the systematization was the manṣab (termed 'Rank' in our title), the result of an attempt to coalesce into a pair of numbers exact indications of rank, payment, military and other obligations of the holder of the manṣab. Every officer serving in the army and every official in the bureaucracy (and the distinctions between them, as we shall see, were not always sharply marked) was given a manṣab or a pair of manṣabs (zāt, and sawār) upon appointment; any promotion in rank and emoluments was indicated by additions to the numbers; conversely, demotions took the form of diminutions of manṣabs.

Manṣab grants are thus crucially important for any study of the political history of the Mughal empire: especially for the position or influence enjoyed by individuals, families and factions as well as particular religious groups within the Mughal empire; equally, too, for its economic history—for example, the pressure of total pay-claims, indicated by manṣabs, upon the available revenue resources at different times. There have been studies or discussions of manṣabs from different points of view. W.H. Moreland noted the peculiar racial composition of the Mughal nobility on the basis of Abul Fazl's manṣab lists;¹ S.R. Sharma studied the grant of manṣabs to Hindus and Muslims as evidence of the liberal and non-liberal predilections of individual Mughal emperors;² Beni Prasad and Irfan Habib considered the evidence of manṣabs in assessing the influence of Nur Jahan and her house under Jahāngīr;³ A.J. Qaisar made use of the manṣab statistics given by Shāh Jahān's official chronicler, 'Abdul Hamīd Lāhorī, to attempt a study of the distribution of the revenue resources of the Empire among the nobility, c. 1647.⁴ I have similarly offered interpretations of various aspects of Mughal history in the light of manṣab evidence.⁵

COMPILING THE RECORD OF MANṢABS

In view of the importance as well as abundance of manṣab data, it is singular that no comprehensive list of manṣab grants (and reductions) has so far been attempted for any period. The lists provided by Nizāmuddin Aḥmad Bakhshī⁶ and Abul Fazl⁷ for c. 1592 and 1595 respectively, and those of Lāhorī,⁸ Wāriṣ⁹ and Ṣāliḥ¹⁰ for 1637 and 1647, 1657 and 1658 have been the most used by historians. For Aurangzeb's reign, I prepared two lists compiled from various sources for the periods 1658–78 and 1679–1707.¹¹ Irfan Habib refers to a similar list compiled by him for Jahāngīr's reign,¹² but it has remained unpublished.

While lists of manṣab holders (and all lists known so far are of manṣab holders above a certain rank), whether by contemporary Mughal historians, or by modern scholars, are undoubtedly useful, these do not enable us to see fluctuations in manṣab grants over time: we have so far only signposts at particular intervals, but no continuous roads.

This work seeks to overcome the deficiency by recording in a chronological (basically year-by-year) order, all grants or resumptions of manṣabs to which there is any reference in the sources. This has been done by transferring to tables all references to manṣabs held by individuals, from every source. Thus while there may not be any reference to the manṣab granted to A, when it was first given, he may be mentioned in 1608, the third Regnal Year (R.Y.), of Jahāngīr, as holding a manṣab of 1,000 zāt, 500 sawār; this would be treated as the first reference to A, and the manṣab would be entered in the table under the third R.Y. of Jahāngīr. If no further promotion is listed, but, in the seventh R.Y. of Jahāngīr, he is mentioned as the holder of 1,500 zāt, 1,000 sawār, this would be entered under that year, the addition in rank being credited to that year, with a cross-reference to the earlier reference under the third R.Y., as well as to any later entry. If in the ninth R.Y. of Jahāngīr, the same manṣab (1,500 zāt, 1,000 sawār) is mentioned, that too is recorded to show that no further change had occurred, the cross-references being furnished again. All deaths (indicating the end of the manṣab held) are recorded. Sources are of course cited with full particulars, by making use of abbreviations that are explained separately. Cross-referencing is, however, confined to each reign (Akbar, Jahāngīr and Shāh Jahān).

As a result, it is possible from this list (I) to tabulate the known net total grants of manṣabs in each year, distributed among various individuals, families and factions; and (2) to trace the manṣab history of every individual holder by following up the cross-references or using the index.

In order to interpret the diverse implications of our evidence about manṣabs, it is important, first, to evaluate our evidence critically. We may cite errors appearing in official chronicles; thus Abul Fazl in his A'in-i-Akbari gives us a list of manṣab-holders of 200 and above both dead and alive, the former being assigned the manṣab held by them at the time of death, or in the fortieth R.Y. of Akbar (1595-6) if alive; yet (1) the list includes persons who died before the manṣab system was instituted in the nineteenth R.Y. and thus had been awarded manṣabs posthumously by Abul Fazl; (2) it does not include a number of persons granted manṣabs before the fortieth R.Y. (though included in Nizāmuddīn Aḥmad Bakḥshī's earlier list).¹³ Errors and discrepancies occur even in the official lists of Lāhorī and Wāriṣ, where manṣab-holders mentioned in the authors' texts do not appear in their lists¹⁴—though such slips are not very numerous.

With non-official compilers of manṣab lists, we must allow a larger margin of error. Šālih is more accurate than others; though obvious slips occur in his list for 1658.¹⁵ Lists compiled by persons like Hawkins and Šādiq Khān are so inaccurate as to be unusable; and the ranks assigned in Hawkins' lists, tabulated in the appendix to this work, are little more than curiosities. The evidence for manṣabs given by those who relied on their memory is used in our main tables wherever the author, like Shaikh Farid Bhakkārī (the author of an important biographical dictionary of nobles compiled during the reign of Shāh Jahān) deserves credit on general grounds. But here too inaccuracy is possible and corroboration with other sources most desirable.

Official documents would be the best form of evidence; but they are relatively scarce in the period covered by this volume (to 1658). There are no akḥbārāt of the Court of the kind that constitute such a valuable source for Aurangzeb's reign (though not always an accurate source as they record what the wakīl of the ruler of Amber heard at court, and sometimes he heard names and manṣabs wrongly). Some documents survive in Hyderabad and the evidence they afford has been fully used, but they cover very few manṣab-holders. In the main, our raw material must remain the official histories (including Jahāngīr's memoirs), private chronicles, biographies and biographical dictionaries; despite their deficiencies and incompleteness, the data offered by them is immense.

¹³ These points were first made by A. J. Qaisar, 'Note on the Date of Institution of Manṣab Under Akbar', Proc. Ind. Hist. Cong. 24th Session, 1961, pp. 156-7; and I. Habib, 'The Manṣab System, 1595-1637', Proc. Ind. Hist. Cong. 29th Session, 1967, Part I, 221-42; cf. also S. Moosvi, 'Evolution of Manṣab System Under Akbar until 1596-7', JRAS, No. 2, 1981, pp. 173-85.

¹⁴ M. Athar Ali, 'Manṣab and Imperial Policy Under Shah Jahan', The Indian Historical Review, Vol. III, No. 1, 1976, pp. 99-104.

¹⁵ Šālih has shown grandees like Mahābat Khān, Khān-i Khānān, Khān-i Jahān Lodi, Khān-i Zamān Bahādur, 'Abdullāh Khān Firoz Jung, Khwāja Abul Hasan and Rāja Gaj Singh as alive in 1658 although they died much earlier. He has not mentioned Abū Tālib Shāista Khān who had the rank of 6,000/6,000 (5,000 x 2 - 3h) and was alive in 1658 ('Amāl-i Šālih', III, 448-51). Such instances might be multiplied.

CHANGES IN THE MANṢAB SYSTEM

We must note that the manṣab system underwent changes; for instance before 1596 the zāt and sawār ranks do not appear to have been differentiated.¹⁶ A single number represented the rank, personal pay, the size of contingent and payment. This suggests that, initially, a person granted a manṣab of 100 would be expected to maintain a contingent of 100 horse,¹⁷ would receive a certain allowance to maintain the contingent, plus a personal salary scheduled in the A'in-i Akbari, and would be under an additional obligation to maintain certain animals.¹⁸ The first change came with introduction of the principle that the manṣab-holder need not maintain the full contingent. While he could receive payment in advance (barāwurdī) on his full rank, the final complete payment would be made only when the contingent was brought for inspection and to be branded (dāghī).¹⁹ Here were the seeds of the later rules of 'one-third', 'one-fourth' and 'one-fifth', laying down the actual size of contingent to be maintained against the sawār rank.

The division of the manṣab into two ranks, zāt and sawār seems to have begun as an occasional practice around 1595 when the first reference to it occurs, in terms suggesting that it was a new practice.²⁰

The A'in-i Akbari, completed formally in 1597, but in fact largely by 1595, has no reference, even indirectly, to double ranking, except once where manṣab-holders are placed in three categories according to whether their contingent (1) equalled, (2) was half or more than half of, and (3) less than half of, their manṣabs.²¹ Obviously only the first steps had been taken towards a double ranking system. But as a glance at our tables would show, the two ranks became quite common before Akbar's death, by which time every manṣab-holder seems to have held a double rank. The zāt came to determine the personal (khāṣa) pay of the holder, and his comparative status; while the sawār determined the size of contingent (tābīnān), and the amount of pay sanctioned to cover the cost of their maintenance. The payment on sawār rank originated from the barāwurdī system of payments under Akbar, and accordingly continued to carry the alternative designation of barāwurdī.

This designation was employed particularly to distinguish the ordinary sawār rank from the additional do-aspa sih-aspa which came into use under Jahāngīr for the first time.²² Theore-

¹⁶ Cf. Moosvi, 'Evolution of Manṣab System'. This conflicts with the assumption in Qaisar, 'Date of Institution of Manṣab Under Akbar', pp. 156-7; and in I. Habib, 'The Manṣab System, 1595-1637', pp. 221-42.

²¹ A'in-i Akbari, Vol. I, 178-180.

²² See my The Mughal Nobility Under Aurangzeb, p. 42; Habib, 'The Manṣab System, 1595-1637', pp. 221-42.

tically, it was a part of the sawār rank, which could now be entirely barāwurdī, partly barāwurdī and partly do-aspa sih-aspa, or entirely do-aspa sih-aspa. For example, a manṣab would be specified as, say, 5,000 zāt, 5,000 sawār,²³ of which 2,000 would be do-aspa sih-aspa, and the rest barāwurdī. Since the military obligation for do-aspa sih-aspa was double that of barāwurdī, it would not matter whether one considers do-aspa sih-aspa as part of the sawār rank, or construes it as an additional simple rank: '5,000 sawār of which 2,000 do-aspa sih-aspa' means in effect 7,000 sawār.²⁴ This simple conversion could not be made so long as the pay on do-aspa sih-aspa rank was not double that of the ordinary barāwurdī rank, but was somewhat less.²⁵ But under Shāh Jahān the rate of payment became exactly double;²⁶ so that it became, for all practical purposes, just an additional ordinary sawār rank.

We also begin to hear of an ordinary additional sawār rank, termed mashrūt, which was conditional upon the manṣab-holder retaining a particular post; the rank was relinquished along with the post.²⁷

While the manṣab formally determined the rank and pay of a noble or official, there is no doubt that the real position was also indicated by the kind of jāgīr or territory assigned to meet the pay claims (ṭalab) based on the manṣab. The jāgīrs were of varying classes, based on the ratio of their real income (hāṣil) to their nominal income (jama', jama'-dāmi). This ratio came to be expressed in terms of months (i.e. if its hāṣil was half the jama', the jāgīr would be shash māha or six-monthly).²⁸ In Shāh Jahān's time the military obligation of a manṣab-holder was scaled down according to the month-ratios of his jāgīr.²⁹ This is a complication which one can unfortunately only note here. The 'month-ratio' of the jāgīr of a person changed from year to year, and with every transfer of jāgīr; since they are recorded in very few instances it was not thought worth while to find place for the month-ratios in our tables.

MANṢAB STATISTICS

The total of manṣabs, given the schedules of pay on zāt and the rates on sawār in force at a particular time, indicated the total demand of the Mughal ruling class on the revenue resources of the empire. In the short run (where the schedules and rates did not change significantly) an increase in manṣabs granted would result in a corresponding reduction in the net resources of the khālīṣa, the territories retained for the Emperor's own treasury, and not assigned away in jāgīrs.³⁰

There is the further interesting question of the average ratio between zāt and sawār ranks maintained from time to time.

The total number of manṣabs is known for certain only for 1595–6, since it is given in the A'in-i Akbari. Abul Faḥl gives the names of all those who held or had held manṣabs of 200 and above, including the dead, and also those officials on whom Abul Faḥl conferred manṣabs posthumously. To arrive at a number true for 1595–6 such names would have to be eliminated; and some others from the Tabaqāt-i Akbari added. In addition, Abul Faḥl gives the numbers of holders of different manṣabs below 200, who were alive in 1595–6.³¹ The following totals emerge:

Total manṣabs of those holding manṣabs of 500 and above	1,90,900
Total manṣabs of those holding manṣabs of 200 and above but below 500	42,100
Total number of those holding manṣabs of below 200	76,200

Unluckily, later documents do not give us similar data. From Lāhorī's statement, it appears that the total of sawār manṣabs held in the twentieth R.Y. of Shāh Jahān (1646–7) was 7,40,000, for he says that, calculating on the basis of 'the one-fourth rule' of obligation, the manṣabdārs' cavalry should have numbered 1,85,000.³² This meant that within about fifty years even the sawār rank (which was always less than the zāt), exceeded the total of single manṣabs of Akbar twice over.

This increase can be illustrated in stages for higher ranks. Thus, confining ourselves to manṣabs of 500 and above, we get the table on p.xiv.

These statistics help us to locate the period of the main increase of the manṣabs between the years 1595–6 and 1621–2, even when it is very likely that the data for 1621–2 are incomplete, and the real total for that year, especially of zāt ranks of less than 500 (and so of sawār ranks attached thereto) is likely to be much more than the one displayed in the table.

Unfortunately, the last years of Jahāngīr's reign (from 1622 to 1627) form a dark patch so far as manṣab information goes. The information from Tuzuk (uneven as it is in this respect) ceases, and the gap is filled by unofficial chronicles that are exceedingly brief in this respect. The information begins again with the accession of Shāh Jahān; henceforth any changes in ranks of holders of manṣabs of 1,000 and above (the so-called umarā') are usually recorded in the offi-

In addition, Lāhorī and Wāriṣ provide us with lists of all manṣab-holders of 500 zāt and above, with their sawār ranks, with reference to deaths or dismissals of such nobles as took place within the respective decades, with years thereof. This decennial information enables us, as we shall see, to cross-check the information in the main narratives of the chronicles.

The fact that such a wealth of information exists in the chronicles of Shāh Jahān's reign has already attracted the attention of individual historians. Irfan Habib has tried to calculate the actual increase in total manṣabs between Akbar's death and the tenth year of Shāh Jahān's reign.³³ A.J. Qaisar has similarly attempted a calculation of the distribution of revenue-resources of the Mughal empire among the various ranks of the nobility.³⁴ Their purposes were well served by the lists of the tenth and twentieth years in Lāhorī. But it is obvious that the information on manṣabs scattered in the pages of these chronicles can be used to answer (or at any rate, attempt to answer) a number of other questions.

One would like to ask, for example, at what pace Shāh Jahān over his entire reign, and in different phases, increased the manṣabs. Can we correlate fluctuations in the manṣab promotions/reductions with his general, declared policy, or policy as reported to us by the chroniclers? Can we, similarly, see reflections of political developments in the ebb and flow of manṣab grants? Are individual groups gaining or losing in the short run in different decades?

The data given in this work, mainly based for this period on the official chronicles, will be of much use in answering these and similar questions. Before offering the relevant figures extracted from our tables, a few problems must be explained.

1. For the first ten years, we have two separate official accounts, viz. those of Qazwīnī and Lāhorī. Sometimes they diverge; but I have generally found Lāhorī more comprehensive and accurate. Qazwīnī does however supply some promotions, which Lāhorī omits; he records for example grants of manṣabs to the 'Deccani' nobles, which Lāhorī omits because the nobles defected later on. Qazwīnī is also more complete in respect of deaths and demotions.

2. Lāhorī has the habit often of giving not the actual manṣab promotion, but the rank attained after promotion (aṣl-o-iṣṭāfa). This leads to difficulties when there is no previous reference to the manṣab held by the officer, especially when the officer concerned earlier held a rank of less than 500 zāt, since official chroniclers do not usually refer to the manṣabs of these levels. In all such cases I have resorted to a simple device for calculating the net increases/diminutions of manṣabs during the second decade of Shāh Jahān's reign. Wherever there is a reference to promotion on the basis of aṣl-o-iṣṭāfa, I have checked the list of the tenth year. If his name is on that list, the old rank has been deducted from the new and the promotion arrived at. If the name is not on the list which is confined to manṣabdārs of 500 zāt and above only, I have assumed that in the tenth year the officer was either not in service, or, if in service, his rank was below 500 zāt, 500 sawār (since the sawār rank does not normally exceed the zāt rank). I have accordingly assumed that the promotion was larger than the difference between the manṣab held as aṣl-o-iṣṭāfa (after promotion) and 450 zāt/450 sawār. A promotion of this magnitude has then been credited to the officer separately from the annual figures.

Since Wāriṣ invariably gives the precise number of ranks (manṣabs) added in promotions, this problem does not trouble us in the third decade. For the first decade the difficulty is insoluble because we do not have a list of manṣabdārs at the beginning of Shāh Jahān's reign to which we could refer in the same way we can to the tenth-year list. Therefore, one can only total up the manṣab promotions which are either specified or can be inferred from two separate statements about the manṣabs of individual persons, and ignore all the other aṣl-o-iṣṭāfa references. This means that our information for the first decade is much less complete than for the second and third decades; nor is it an equally reliable index.

3. Since all the three chroniclers confine their references as a rule to manṣabdārs of 500 zāt and above, any statistics based on their information will be incomplete to some extent. The actual extent is another question: in the twentieth year, as we have seen, Lāhorī calculated the strength of the cavalry of manṣab-holders at 1,85,000 hypothetically on the basis of the 'one-fourth rule'.³⁵ That is, the total of sawār manṣabs at that time must have been 7,40,000. His list of the same year shows that those holding ranks of 500 zāt and above held in the aggregate 5,21,575 sawārs.³⁶ In other words, the listed category held 71 per cent of all sawār manṣabs. We may thus assume that the trends noticeable in this sector were probably true of manṣabs in general.

4. A minor problem relates to the year-wise arrangement of manṣab grants. Qazwīnī gives regnal years by the solar calendar, beginning each year with Nauroz; Lāhorī and Wāriṣ follow the Hijarī calendar, but begin each year with Jumāda II and not Muḥarram. I have adopted the Hijarī years (beginning with the first day of Muḥarram) for convenience. This creates a problem in correlating our information for the Hijarī years, with the lists for the tenth, twentieth and thirtieth years in Lāhorī and Wāriṣ, since a difference of six months (between 1st Muḥarram and 1st Jumāda II) is involved. But the total difference amounts to only 8 per cent of the total decade, with some of the manṣabs granted towards the end correspondingly cancelled at the beginning. The difference in terms of manṣabs from this cause would not, therefore, be of more than marginal significance.

On this basis, I have calculated all the manṣab promotions recorded, arranged year-wise in the following table. The column for manṣab reduction includes cessation of manṣabs by death, dismissal or retirement. The final column gives the net results, plus (+) representing net promotions, and minus (−), net reductions.

Before attempting to interpret these figures, their accuracy may be checked simply by comparing the decennial results of our annual tables with the changes in the total manṣabs in the second and third decades, as deduced from comparisons of the decennial lists in Lāhorī and Wāriṣ. The table below gives the results obtained from the two methods:

NET CHANGE IN TOTAL MANṢABS

Shāh Jahān's reign	According to Annual Totals		According to the Lists of Lāhorī and Wāriṣ
	Zāt	Sawār	Zāt	Sawār
2nd decade	10,450*	1,32,715	28,400	86,880
3rd decade	97,100	68,470	56,300	41,760

* Net enhancements & demotions: −5,050; net asl-o-izafa: +15,500

 Net enhancements & demotions: +1,30,215; net asl-o-izafa: +2,500

These figures show similar though far from identical results derived from the two sources, viz., the annual record in the chronicles and the decennial lists. Since the lists are likely to be complete, it can be inferred that the accounts of Lāhorī and Wāriṣ contain some, but perhaps not many, omissions (of appointments, promotions, as well as reductions). This, from the point of view of using their evidence, is rather encouraging. It is possible to proceed further on the basis of two assumptions.

First, though the annual narrative may lead to large divergences from the true in the long run (the annual deviations accumulating), it may provide us sounder guidance as to the relative scale of annual fluctuations in awards of manṣabs.

Secondly, comparison of the total of the lists of the tenth, twentieth and thirtieth years provides us with a reliable index of the general trend over the second and third decades, although nothing can unfortunately be said as confidently about the trend in the first decade.

What strikes us about manṣab evidence from the first decade narratives is the very moderate scale of promotion granted by Shāh Jahān in zāt ranks in the first two years of his reign, in spite of the considerable political difficulties he faced. Whereas Aurangzeb granted a net enhancement of 89,000 zāt in his first two regnal years, Shāh Jahān granted only 48,900 net. On the other hand the net increase in the sawār manṣab (45,650) in Shāh Jahān's first two years did not fall much behind the net increase of sawār granted by Aurangzeb in his first two years.³⁷ Does this mean that Shāh Jahān was inclined to enhance the sawār manṣabs (requiring maintenance of larger military contingents), but not willing to increase the zāt manṣabs which involved only an increase in the personal pay of the manṣabdars? In fact, over the entire first decade manṣab statistics show considerable discrepancies between trends in the zāt and sawār ranks. The net zāt manṣab increase is only 100, while sawār manṣabs increase by 90,385.

This phenomenon fits in with what we know otherwise of Shāh Jahān's financial policy in his early years. According to Qazwīnī he inherited a nearly depleted treasury and a vastly reduced khālīṣa territory. He set out to fill his treasury by enlarging the khālīṣa.³⁸ This could have been done only by reducing or restricting the area assigned in jāgīrs. Since reserve in the sawār rank promotions would have affected the strength of the standing army, it was only by restricting zāt enhancements that claims to jāgīrs could have been effectively restricted.

Another interesting feature of the first decade is that military ventures are immediately reflected in manṣab promotions. In A.H. 1039 (A.D. 1629–30), Khān-i Jahān Lodi rebelled; and in A.H. 1044 (A.D. 1634–5) Jhujhar Singh. These are, besides the first regnal year, the peak years for net grants of zāt and sawār manṣabs.

During the second decade, a comparison of the lists of the tenth and twentieth years reveals that zāt manṣabs increased by 28,400, while the sawār went up by 86,880. The primacy of sawār enhancements over zāt was thus still being maintained. Indeed the figures calculated from Lāhorī's narrative show this still more sharply: a net decline of 5,050 in zāt as against an increase of 1,30,215 in sawār. As for political events, the Balkh campaign (A.D. 1646–7) was reflected in the highest figures for net zāt and sawār enhancements in A.H. 1056 (A.D. 1646–7) during the entire decade.

The pattern changes radically in the third decade and zāt enhancements now dramatically take primacy. A comparison of the lists of the twentieth and thirtieth years shows that there were net zāt enhancements of 56,300 as against 41,760 sawārs. The figures built up from the annual entries in this work show the same trend even more strikingly:

97,100 zāt enhancements as against 68,470 sawārs. Moreover military campaigns like the second and third Qandahār campaigns (1651–2 and 1652–3) are no longer reflected in manṣab grants. The large manṣab increase in 1066 (1655–6) does coincide with the wars with Golkunda and Bijāpur, but it is also possible that the coming war of succession was already casting its shadows.

Why Shāh Jahān's manṣab policy changed in the third decade is a problematic question. It is possible, perhaps, to see in it a symptom of the crisis which ultimately came with the war of succession. Manṣabs were now being given not to increase or maintain military strength but to win factional support (principally, perhaps, for strengthening Dārā Shukoh's position). For this purpose zāt rank enhancements were not only sufficient but requisite, and this process continued into Aurangzeb's reign, as we have already seen.

From a quantitative study of this kind, we can shift to a study of individual manṣab-holders and make a number of deductions about the Mughal ruling class: its composition, the norms followed in recruitment, promotion, reduction in rank, assignment of duties, etc.

MANṢAB RECRUITMENT AND PROMOTION

Granting a manṣab was theoretically the sole prerogative of the Emperor, though it was naturally done in the overwhelming majority of cases on the recommendation (tajvīz) of senior officers, especially the bakhshī-i mumālīk (the second of the principal ministers) and the governors. Certain criteria appear to have been followed for manṣab grants, particularly for initial recruitment.

First of all, a primary claim on a manṣab was thought to vest in the sons and close kinsmen of those already in service. Such persons were known as khānazāds, i.e. those born of persons already 'slaves' of the Emperor. While no manṣab was ever inherited it was only normal for the sons of the holder of a high manṣab to be granted manṣabs in their turn. One may cite the case of Saiyid Khān-i Jahān Bārha. When he died in 1645, he held a manṣab of 5,000/5,000 (2–3h) (an abbreviation for 5,000 zāt, 5,000 sawār, 5,000 do-aspa sih-aspa). His two sons were each given manṣabs of 1,000/250, and a nephew an additional one (iẓāfa) of 500/600, so that out of the manṣabs of 5,000/5,000 + 5,000 which Khān-i Jahān held on his death, 2,500/1,100 were distributed among three members of his family.³⁹ When Rāja Bethaldās (not a ruling chief) died in 1651, he held a manṣab of 5,000/5,000 + 2,000. His eldest son Anīrudh was now given an additional manṣab of 1,500/2,000, and two other sons were granted additions of 500/700 and 600/250; what a fourth son received is not stated.⁴⁰ Thus at least the manṣabs of 2,600/2,950 of Bethaldās' manṣab were retained in his family. Such examples could be multiplied from our work. In all cases there is, however, a great difference between the manṣab vacated by the deceased noble and the manṣabs transferred to his sons and kinsmen.

A second and very interesting criterion was the recipient's status and service in another empire or kingdom. The Mughals followed the policy of giving manṣabs to persons who either themselves held high office in the Ṣafavid and Uzbek empires or were sons or kinsmen of such officials. The family of Nūr Jahān offers a well-known example of Ṣafavid bureaucrats migrating to India over a span of two or three generations.⁴¹ The bulk of Persian (Irānī, Irāqī, Khurāsānī) and Central Asian (Tūrānī) immigrants belonged to this category. Subsequently, there was a continuous influx of a similar kind from the Deccan Sultanates, so much so that the 'Adil Shāh of Bijāpur obtained in 1636, as a special concession, a pledge from the Mughal Emperor that he would not take into his service any person previously serving the 'Adil Shāh.⁴²

Manṣabs given to persons so drawn from other bureaucracies were usually largely in accordance with the status enjoyed by them in those regimes. Thus 'Alī Mardān Khān, from Iran, and Mīr Jumla, direct from Golkunda, at once received high manṣabs of 5,000/5,000 because they had already held very high positions in those states.⁴³ Mīr Jumla was, indeed, appointed Dīwān of the empire as well.⁴⁴ Others enjoying lower positions of power and influence under their previous masters, received correspondingly lower manṣabs.

A third criterion was possession of a hereditary principality, recognized as waṭan jāgīr. This was especially the case with the Rajput ruling chiefs: thus after 1614 every Rānā of Mewār attained the manṣab of 5,000/5,000 upon accession.⁴⁵ The manṣab might be enhanced subsequently; but it remained the minimum granted to the rulers of Mewār, presumably on the principle that the pay should correspond roughly to the estimated revenue (jama') of Mewār. A similar minimum manṣab seems to have been fixed for all the major Rajput states, as is clear from the lists of manṣabs given below granted at accession to each ruler of Mārṣār and Bikāner.

In spite of the claims of khānāzāds, high officers of other regimes, and hereditary chiefs, some scope still remained for other entrants. The Mughals were no believers in equality; and considerations of race played a considerable part in their system of recruitment. Thus an Irānī captain would generally have a better chance of rising to the position of a manṣab holder than, say, an Indian Muslim, in particular, a Kashmiri.⁴⁶ Since the Afghāns and Rajputs made good soldiers, they had manṣabs in substantial numbers as well, though there was often an attempt to keep grants of manṣabs to both races under some constraint.⁴⁷ A similar status was enjoyed by the small 'martial' clan of the Saiyids of Bārha.⁴⁸

There remained room for talent and ability, in search of which the Emperor might go beyond the few recognized, though large, communities already mentioned. There were the scholarly families of Indian Muslims from amongst whom came Abul Fazl and Sa'dullah Khān, the famous ministers of Akbar and Shāh Jahān. Similarly, the Indian secretarial and accountant castes (the Khatris, Kāyasths, Nāgar Brahmans) produced high officers including Todar Mal and Raghunāth, the eminent finance ministers of Akbar and Aurangzeb.

Recruitment to the Mughal nobility—or the act of granting a manṣab—took place without any test or examination, military or academic. The theory, as propounded by Abul Fazl, was that imperial inspection of the candidate was a sufficient test of his deserts.⁴⁹ Such inspection was apparently essential; though in many cases, especially when the governors of distant provinces recommended the grant of a manṣab, it is difficult to see how the Emperor could have inspected the candidate. Certainly, Maratha chiefs in the Deccan seem usually to have received manṣabs without making a pilgrimage to the Imperial Court. There must clearly have been some procedure for examining the candidate's merits beyond the recommendations of the officials whose protégé he might happen to be. There is a report in the Akhbārāt of Prince A'zam's headquarters at Aḥmadabad that a barber pretended to be a Mughal (Tūrānī), and stood as an approved candidate for the manṣab of 150 before the prince. On the third day, however, a harkāra or spy reported the true facts of his birth; and he was forthwith dismissed and handed over to the kotwāl for punishment.⁵⁰ Such secret enquiry must have been controlled by the Mīr Bakhshī, who was the central minister in charge alike of presenting candidates for awards of manṣabs, and of the entire department of intelligence.⁵¹ It also seems that, in addition, certain other manṣab-holders stood surety for the new appointees (nau-sarafrāz), this task also being sometimes performed by recognized bankers (mahājans, sāhus).⁵²

Once granted a manṣab, the career of the official essentially revolved round further enhancements of his manṣab. It was thus that one climbed the ladder of bureaucratic eminence as well as increased one's income. Every additional manṣab meant a higher salary, and larger jāgīrs assigned in lieu thereof. These promotions were generally granted on the recommendation (tajvīz) of a superior officer (governor or commander), but were always personally ordered by the Emperor.

Manucci, writing during the last years of Aurangzeb's reign, observed how this step-by-step promotion took place: 'To get the hazārī or the pay of one thousand, it is necessary to wait a long time and work hard. For the kings only grant it sparingly, and only to those who by their services or their skill in affairs have arrived at the stage of deserving it. In having this rate of pay accorded to you, they give you also the title of omera [umara]—that is, noble.'⁵³

The variations in the pace of promotion of manṣab holders were in practice very great. Most manṣab holders rose very slowly, manṣab enhancements being few and far between. A few rose more rapidly. From the data about the actual careers of a large number of manṣab holders that I have collected, I present as a random illustration of each kind, the careers of Shitāb Khān and Ja'far Ilāhwardī Khān, who both started with about the same manṣab:

In one case we have a career of 31 years chequered by demotions and ultimate return to the same manṣab from which the career had started. In another, after a rather slow rise in the early years of service, promotions came with rapidity with perhaps just one slight demotion in terms of do-aspa sih-aspa ranks between 1659–60 and 1666–7; and the manṣab held at death, after thirty-one years of service—the same span as that of Shitāb Khān—was eight times the zāt and thirty times the initial sawār manṣab.

Behind such different patterns of individual careers, there clearly lay diverse factors. The first prerequisite for enhancement of a manṣab was the regular maintenance of contingents with no lapse found by the imperial inspector of brand and muster (dagh o chihra). As early a writer as Badāunī stated this principle in the following words:

It was decreed [by Akbar] that every amīr should initially be given the rank of 20 (bisī) and he should be ready with his retainers to be present wherever required. When he had brought those twenty horses to the brand (dāgh) according to the regulations he could then be promoted to the rank of 100 (sadī), etc. They should maintain elephants, horses and camels in accordance with these very rules. When cavalry in accordance with the raised manṣab was brought to the muster, then the manṣab-holder could be promoted in accordance with his abilities and personal circumstances to the rank of 1,000 or 2,000 or even up to 5,000, beyond which there is no higher rank (pāya). But if they failed to bring the full contingent to the muster, their ranks (pāya) were to be reduced (lit. they fall from their rank).⁵⁴

Demotions sometimes occurred because the obligatory size of contingents was not maintained. This happened, for example, to Mahābat Khān in A.D. 1617 when the do-aspa sih-aspa given to him was withdrawn because he had failed to raise and maintain the requisite contingents against it.⁵⁵

Coupled with this was the quality of service in war. Obviously the size of contingent then became very important; but otherwise too, it was common to reward leading participants in a successful military campaign with enhancements of manṣabs whereas those who had the misfortune of serving in an ill-fated expedition were either ignored or faced censure and reduction of manṣab. When Daulatābād was captured in A.D. 1633, for example, the besiegers' manṣabs were suitably enhanced; a leading commander, Naṣīrī Khān, was given the promotion of 1,000/1,000, and he thus attained the manṣab of 5,000/5,000.⁵⁶

Individual lapses and failures in military campaigns were carefully watched. Bahādur Khān's case might serve as an example. He was an Afghan officer with a manṣab of 5,000/5,000 + 5,000 who served valiantly in the Balkh campaign of 1646–7. But his conduct on more than one occasion attracted royal displeasure—he did not go to Sa'īd Khān's aid nor pursue Nazar Muḥammad Khān closely enough; and he did not co-operate energetically with Prince Aurangzeb.⁵⁷ He was censured for these failures, denied any increase in manṣab and deprived of the jāgīr assigned against his manṣab for two years, so as to realize the imperial demands (muṭālaba) against him.⁵⁸ He was reinstated only after two years.⁵⁹ Clearly, individual lapses did not lead to very severe punishments as a rule but were usually reflected in reductions of manṣabs, or the withholding of promotions.

Such manṣab holders as were assigned to a purely bureaucratic line rose in manṣab with each fresh post.

This was particularly true of those who served in secretarial or accountancy branches and practically always held an office along with their manṣab. One may look, for example, at 'Ināyatullah 'Aqil Khān's career:

Manṣabdārs serving in the army were often given a promotion in manṣab when appointed to a responsible post. These differed from the mashrūf rank attached to the post which was granted to every incumbent only for his term in that office.⁶⁰ To cite the career of a medium-ranking manṣabdār: Sultān Yār, son of Alāh Yār Koka, had his rank raised to 1,000/1,000 when appointed faujdar (Commandant) of Baroda in 1647–8; to 1,500/1,500 when made faujdar of Pilbahar.⁶¹

Appointments to offices were not always linked to promotions. Thus no promotion in manṣab was awarded to Shāista Khān when he was appointed shubedār or nāẓim of Bihār in 1638–9, of Allahābād in 1642–3, of Mālwa in 1645–6, of Gujarāt in 1646, or of the Deccan in 1649–50, though promotions came to him in between, on separate occasions, for he rose from 5,000/5,000 + 3,000 to 5,000/5,000 + 5,000, during this period.⁶²

Imperial favour for personal, family or political reasons sometimes played an important role: in such cases promotion could occur very rapidly indeed. The rapid promotions in manṣabs granted to members of Nur Jahān's family were pointed out by Benī Prasad⁶³ and more recently analysed by Irfan Habib.⁶⁴ But these were by no means exceptional. The Chishtī family of Fathpur Sikri (an Indian Muslim or Shaikhzāda house) benefited similarly, because of the emperor's personal regard for the mystic Shaikh Salīm Chishtī. The career of Shaikh Kabīr Chishtī (title Shajā'at Khān) in terms of manṣab promotions can be traced as follows:

Jahāngīr ascended the throne in 1605 and immediately trebled Shajā'at Khān's zāt rank; he trebled it again during 1611–13. More illustrious or better-known instances of meteoric promotions are offered by Mahābat Khān, Khān-i Jahān Lodī, and 'Abdullah Khān, all from the early years of Jahāngīr's reign. These promotions were due not only to the Emperor's personal liking for individuals, but also to his anxiety to promote persons in his confidence to counter-balance the influence of many of his father's nobles, who had been hostile to his claims to the throne. It was characteristic of the Mughal system in its great days that Jahāngīr did not at any time contemplate reducing the manṣab (let alone dismissing, imprisoning or killing) such nobles, but only tried to reduce their influence by elevating his own partisans.

While under Shāh Jahān greater restraint was exercised, those he favoured obtained promotions faster than others. There was, for example, the family of the Rāthors of Jodhpur, to which his mother belonged. Mahesh Dās Rāthor's career illustrates the results of such favour.

Within six years (1641–2 to 1646–7) Mahesh Dās Rāthor rose from 1,000/1,000 to 4,000/4,000, a fourfold increase in both zāt and sawār manṣabs.

THE RACIAL COMPOSITION OF MANṢAB-HOLDERS

One factor which by its very nature cannot be established from a few individual careers, is the influence of race. Other things being equal, those belonging to particular racial or cultural groups had a greater chance of advancement than others, for while promotion was not restricted to a particular group, certain groups were undoubtedly favoured more than others. There was also a change in imperial policy from time to time towards particular groups.

In this work I have recorded the group-affiliations of manṣab-holders. From this information we can prepare statistical tables of the total strength of different groups within the Mughal nobility at different times during the reigns of Akbar, Jahāngīr and Shāh Jahān. These tables, in a summary form, are reproduced below:

A. Highest Manṣabs

'Other Muslims' and 'Other Hindus' include persons whose faith is known but whose particular group cannot be identified. Thus 'other Muslims' could include Tūrānīs, who cannot be so identified owing to lack of data. Naturally such data are rather less abundant for the lower ranks; and this explains the proportionately large number of 'other Muslims' in the table for 'medium' manṣabs.⁶⁵

It can be seen that while among medium manṣabs, Irānīs and Tūrānīs remained largely equal in number over the period, the disproportionate advancement of Irānīs, and relative decline of Tūrānīs, are a marked feature in the 'highest' and 'high' ranks. Quite obviously, Irānīs were now being favoured for promotion much more than Tūrānīs. Though far fewer in number, there is a distinct increase in the number of Afghāns in the high and medium manṣabs. Clearly, the Afghāns had partly broken through the constraints upon their promotion in the Mughal nobility, which had been caused by their struggles with the Mughals for the suzerainty of northern India. The Indian Muslims and Rajputs, forming roughly equal groups, maintained their positions relative to the total increase, and, by and large, neither gained nor lost in imperial favour.

What these statistics suggest is also borne out by the statements of contemporary writers. 'Aziz Koka (A.D. 1613) and an anonymous Dutch writer (A.D. 1626) speak of the enormous favours given to the Irānīs under Jahāngīr; 'Aziz Koka refers too to the corresponding lack of confidence placed by the Emperor on the Tūrānīs.⁶⁶ The same writer speaks of Jahāngīr's policy of favouring Shaikhzādas (Indian Muslims) and pursuing hostility to the Rājputs; and Hawkins (1609) corroborates him at least in respect of the Rājputs.⁶⁷ But the phase in which the Rājputs had some constraints placed upon their promotion does not seem to have been long-lasting. Jahāngīr had his own favourite Rājputs (Bīr Singh Bundela, Anī Rai Singh-dalan, Rāo Karan of Mewār; etc.), whom he promoted to very high manṣabs. In any case, by 1621 the Rājputs seem to have recovered the ground lost during the first eight years of Jahāngīr's reign.

Shāh Jahān seems to have tried hard to emphasize the Central Asian affiliations of the Mughal dynasty (note his resurrection of the title Šāhib-i Qirān-i Šāni, after Timur, and his ambition of recovering the ancestral Timurid possessions), and one may infer that the Tūrānīs therefore received some extra favours at his hand. A steady numerical progress of the Tūrānīs can indeed be seen in high and medium manṣabs between 1637–8 and 1656–7, though this is by no means dramatic and not, apparently, at the expense of the Irānīs.

MAIN OFFICES IN THE MUGHAL ADMINISTRATION

The manṣab system represented one facet of the extreme

degree of systematization and centralization reached in the Mughal empire. It was similarly reflected in the uniformity enforced in the posts and functions attached thereto in all parts of the empire. This was greatly facilitated by the division of the empire into ṣūbas (initiated in A.D. 1580), each ṣūba having a set of officials similar to, or identical with, that in the rest. Except for the governors, who had direct access to the Emperor, the other officials were subordinate, not to the governor, but to corresponding imperial ministers at the centre. The functions and jurisdiction of the central ministers and the ṣūba officials tended, therefore, to be quite rigorously defined. Since Ibn Hasan and P. Saran have offered detailed treatment of the position and functions of, respectively, the central and ṣūba officials,⁶⁸ there is little need for any detailed discussion here. Some broad facts may, however, be stated for the reader to appreciate the importance of different appointments.

At the centre, the highest post (in terms of status) was wakil; theoretically the agent of the Emperor in all matters; in practice, he enjoyed only as much power as the Emperor might allow him. After 1640–1 (with the death of Aṣaf Khān), the office was in practice abolished. The officer next in rank was the wazīr-i mamālīk, or diwān-i kul, who controlled all financial matters, and had three principal subordinates: diwān-i tan, in charge of jāgīr-assignments; diwān-i khālisa, in charge of the territories held for the Emperor's income; and diwān-i bayūtāt, in charge of the expenditure of the Imperial establishment. The mīr bakhshī or bakhshī-i mamālīk was in charge of grants and resumption of manṣabs, postings of commanders, checking their contingents and the intelligence or newsgathering machinery of the empire. He had three major subordinates (the first, second and third bakhshīs). The ṣadrus ṣudur was the minister in charge of imperial charities in the form of land and cash grants. He also recommended the appointment of qāzīs, or judges. The mīr sāmān or khān sāmān managed the imperial establishment; the mīr'adl assisted the Emperor in the process of justice; and the mīr baḥr controlled ferries and river-boats.

In the ṣūbas the governor (nāẓim, ṣāhib-i ṣūba, ṣūba-dār) was directly subordinate to the Emperor, and was by and large the supreme military commandant of the area. But the other ṣūba officials, namely, the diwān, bakhshī and waqā'i-nawīs and ṣadr, did not carry out his orders; they were directly subordinate to the central ministers, diwān-i kul, mīr bakhshī and ṣadrus ṣudur respectively.

Each governor was normally the faujdar (commandant) of a part of his ṣūba. The remaining area fell under the jurisdiction of different *faujdar*s, who were mostly manṣabdars of some status. Normally only the Emperor could appoint a faujdar; his jurisdiction might or might not correspond to the division called sarkār, or in Shāh Jahān's time, chakla. Important forts had castellans (qila'dars) appointed to them; sometimes strategic posts (thānas) had thānedars, directly named by the Emperor.

⁶⁸ Ibn Hasan, The Central Structure of the Mughal Empire and its Practical Working up to the year 1657, Oxford, 1936; P. Saran, The Provincial Government of the Mughals (1526–1658), Allahabad, 1941.

The khālīṣa establishment had its own officials, such as karorī (collector) and amīn (assessor), placed over large groups of parganas (subdivisions); and these were often appointed faujḍārs of the area as well. A class of officials, comprising the amīn ul mulk at the centre, and amīns at the ṣubās, which supervised the administration of jāgīrs, tended to fall into abeyance after Akbar.⁶⁹

This work aims at recording all known appointments to all these offices, and to such others (listed in the Glossary), as are known, or may be presumed, to have been filled by Imperial appointment. It should, however, be noted that though appointments to such pargana level posts as qāzī, qānūngo, or chaudharī have occasionally been recorded, no attempt has been made to collect sundry names of such officials from the vast number of documents in the various archives. For the higher posts, however, an attempt has been made to achieve completeness. As in the case of manṣabs, if a person is simply referred to as holding an office in a particular year, this is recorded although his appointment in an earlier year might already have been entered. This has been done to ensure that the period a person continued in a particular post or office should also be ascertainable from our lists. This is all the more necessary since in many cases the appointment or removal from office is left unrecorded in our sources.

CENTRAL MINISTERS

It is possible, then, to reconstruct from this work lists of incumbents of major offices at the centre and of governorships of the ṣubās. Some gaps, unfortunately, still persist in our information, though it tends to be practically complete for the reign of Shāh Jahān (A.D. 1628–58). For other offices the gaps become too numerous for any analysis to be attempted, though individual pieces of information remain of value for tracing the careers of individuals or the political history of particular regions.

Tables 1–3 present a record of appointments to the major offices at the Centre, viz., wakīl, dīwān-i kul, mīr bakhshī, ṣadr and mīr sāmān or khān sāmān. This is followed, in Tables 4–6, by a list of governors in all ṣubās of the empire, chronologically arranged (pp. xxxii–xl).

Certain important inferences can immediately be drawn from these lists. In Akbar's time and at the beginning of Jahāngīr's reign we find a tendency for offices to be shared between two or even three officials, notably with regard to the office of the dīwān. Subsequently, all posts came to have only single incumbents.

A second tendency is to have ministers with only short periods in office, followed for fairly long periods by ministers who seem to have obtained the Emperor's confidence. Thus, taking the office of the central dīwān and beginning with 1574, we see long tenures such as those of Todar Māl (1582–3 to 1588–9 as single incumbent), I'timād-ud-daula (1612–21), Khwāja Abul Hasan (1621–7), Islām Khān Mashhadī

(1639–40 to 1645–6), and Sa'adullah Khān (1646–56). These were usually separated by times where the office was held by individuals for very short periods. Similarly, in the office of mīr bakhshī, Farīd Bukhārī (1594–5 to 1605–6) and Ṣādiq Khān (1628–9 to 1633–4) enjoyed exceptionally long tenures; the terms of other appointments were much shorter, some being removed or transferred within a year. One here encounters the absence in Mughal polity of life tenures, as well as the fact that in the Mughal administration, removal from a ministerial office was by no means a prelude to the closure of a career. The only minister executed was Shāh Manṣūr in circumstances which Akbar himself seems to have regretted later.⁷⁰ Otherwise, as may be seen from the careers of some of those who served as ministers, one could always be transferred back to a ministerial office. Thus Khwāja Abul Hasan served as dīwān-i kul jointly with Ja'far Beg Āṣaf Khān (2nd–4th R.Y. of Jahāngīr), and then singly (4th–6th R.Y.). In the sixth year he lost the office to I'timād-ud-daula. In the eighth, he was appointed mīr bakhshī, but made in the ninth to share it with Ibrāhīm Khān. From the tenth to the fifteenth he held it by himself, losing it in the fifteenth year to Ṣādiq Khān. The very next year, the sixteenth, he was appointed dīwān-i kul, and continued to hold it till Jahāngīr's last (twenty-second) year. Upon Shāh Jahān's accession, he lost this office and never again held a ministerial post; yet he continued to hold a high manṣab under the new sovereign.⁷¹

Changes in the racial composition of ministers are of some interest. It will be seen that Akbar drew his ministers from almost all sections of the nobility: Irānīs, Tūrānīs, Hindus and Indian Muslims. But with Jahāngīr, the complexion changes: all his three wakīls were Irānīs; so were all his six dīwāns, except for one wazīr ul mulk who held the office jointly for barely one year at the beginning of the reign.

The Indian Muslim noble, Shaikh Farīd Bukhārī, at first continued as mīr bakhshī upon Jahāngīr's accession; but was removed within a year. Then, except for Wazīr-ul Mulk fleetingly holding the office in the second year, all his mīr bakhshīs were Irānīs, and so were all his mīr sāmāns. The ṣadrs formed the sole exception to this process of Iraniization, partly because, being a semi-theological office, there was a basic preference for those who were Sunnis; and the Irānīs were mostly Shias. Thus whereas Akbar during the period 1577–8 to 1605 had two Irānīs as ṣadrs for about nine years, Jahāngīr had only one and that during his last three years only.

Iranian domination continued under Shāh Jahān. Āṣaf Khān was his only wakīl. His first dīwān, Wazīr Khān, who was an Indian Muslim, did not remain in office for more than a year. Sa'dullah Khān, indeed, held office for a number of years (1646–7 to 1655–6); but except for this period of about ten years, for the other twenty years of the reign the office of dīwān was filled by Irānīs alone. All the thirteen mīr bakhshīs of Shāh Jahān were Irānīs; and except for three years when Sa'dullah Khān was mīr sāmān, Irānīs held that office for all the remaining years of the three decades of Shāh Jahān's reign. As for *ṣadr*s, the sole Irānī ṣadr of Jahāngīr's reign continued under Shāh Jahān for fifteen years; but his two successors were Indian Muslims. This virtual monopoly by the Irānīs of the offices of central ministers, with the sole exception of the relatively minor office of ṣadr, is a remarkable fact. It continued under Aurangzeb;⁷² and, while it was helped by the rise of I'timād-ud-daula's family,⁷³ it was not solely caused by it. Was it that the Emperor most trusted those who had no roots in the country; and of such the Irānīs happened to be culturally the most advanced?

GOVERNORS OF ṢŪBAS

Tables 4–6 indicate that our information on governors is rather patchy for Akbar's reign, rather less inadequate for Jahāngīr, and practically complete for the reign of Shāh Jahān, where, of the maximum 512 possible entries (one year under each ṣuba) we are able to fill in 466.⁷⁴

Taking the years for which the identity of the governor is known,⁷⁵ we obtain a result similar to that of ministerial offices in respect of the duration of terms of governors. This is set out, reign-wise, in the following table:

Ṣuba	Average period of term of Governor
	Akbar 1580–1605	Jahāngīr 1605–27	Shāh Jahān 1628–58
Bengāl	5 yrs, 2 m.	2 yrs	4 yrs, 7 m.
Orissa	2 yrs	2 yrs, 1 m.	3 yrs, 6½ m.
Bihār	2 yrs, 10 m.	2 yrs, 1 m.	2 yrs, 8 m.
Awadh	2 yrs	1 yr	1½ yrs
Allahabād	3 yrs	1 yr, 7 m.	3 yrs, 2½ m.
Agra	2 yrs	1¾ yrs	1 yr, 9½ m.
Delhī	2 yrs, 9 m.	1¾ yrs	2 yrs, 4 m.
Lāhore	3 yrs, 9½ m.	2 yrs, 2½ m.	3 yrs
Multān	1 yr, 7 m.	2 yrs, 10m.	2 yrs, 2 m.
Thatta (Sind)	2 yrs	2 yrs, 1m.	2 yrs, 2 m.
Kashmīr	2 yrs	2 yrs, 7m.	3 yrs, 2½ m.
Kābul	2 yrs, 10 m.	3½ yrs	4 yrs
Ajmer	1 yr, 2½ m.	1 yr	3 yrs, 4 m.
Gujarāt	2 yrs, 10 m.	2 yrs	2 yrs, 8 m.
Mālwa	2½ yrs	3 yrs, 2½ m.	2½ yrs
The Deccan	3 yrs	3 yrs, 2 m.	2 yrs, 11 m.

It can be seen that the average term of governors remained short, mostly between two and three years, during all the three reigns. There were however long tenures: under Shāh

Jahān three individuals occupied the office of governor of a ṣuba continuously for periods of twelve, nine and eight years.⁷⁶ More frequently, the same persons were moved as governor from one ṣuba to the other; periods when an individual served continuously as governor of different ṣubas under Shāh Jahān extended to nineteen, seventeen and sixteen years in three particular cases.⁷⁷

The racial composition of governors can be studied through a simple formula. We take the total number of years for which the incumbents of governorships of various ṣubas are known from each reign (for only a part of Akbar's reign 1580–1605). We then count the number of years when members of different racial groups appear as governors, and calculate the respective percentages of the total of years. We would thus consider every governorship at par, equating Bengāl with Ajmer, or the Deccan with Thatta; but despite this shortcoming, the representation of different groups in this very important class of appointments would still become clearly evident.

Irānīs	24	35.5	45
Tūrānīs	42	23	22
Afghāns	0.5	3.7	2
Indian Muslims	8.5	21.3	10
Muslims, race unknown	1	—	3.8
Hindus	15.5	2.6	2

The table shows that the Irānīs made a steady advance in occupying governorships, though they were far from obtaining the monopoly they had achieved in ministerial offices. There was a corresponding decline among the Tūrānīs. The position of Indian Muslims and Afghāns improved somewhat; but that of the Hindus declined quite sharply.

It would thus appear that the Mughal emperors did not assume that the different racial groups' claim to manṣabs made them proportionately eligible to ministerial posts or governorships. Eventually the Irānīs came to be preferred disproportionately to their position in the manṣab-holding class, while the Hindus, including Rājputs, held fewer positions than their numerical manṣab strength would have led us to expect.

THE SYSTEM OF TITLES

Apart from manṣabs and appointments to offices, this work aims at recording all known grants of titles. Wherever the grant of a title is explicitly recorded in a source, the grant is entered under the appropriate year. Where sources are ⁷² See my Mughal Nobility Under Aurangzeb, pp. 18–19.

⁷³ Cf. Irfan Habib, 'The Family of Nur Jahan During Jahangir's Reign', pp. 74–95.

⁷⁴ See my 'Provincial Governors Under Shāh Jahān: An Analysis', Medieval India—A Miscellany, Vol. III, pp. 80–112.

silent about the actual grant of title, the grant is recorded under the year when its holder is first referred to by that title.

The recording of titles might, at first sight, be considered as merely offering a bow to the court ceremonial of the Mughal Empire. But in fact it is essential to have complete information about titles in order to trace the careers of individual officers. The reason is that in official use, the title replaced the personal name; and a title granted later replaced the earlier title. For example Nur Jahān's father Ghiyaṣ Beg held the title of I'timād-ud-daula, granted to him by Jahāngīr (J 37). His son Abul Hasan first received the title I'tiqād Khān (J 461); subsequently when the title Āṣaf Khān was conferred upon him, he relinquished the title I'tiqād Khān. The latter title was then granted to his brother Shāpur, who was thenceforth known by it. In order to identify anyone referred to as I'tiqād Khān, one has to know who held the title at the time of reference.

An important feature of the Mughal system of titles was that the same title was never assigned to two nobles at the same time. When this convention was broken by Bahādur Shāh (1707-12) for the first time, it created considerable bureaucratic consternation.⁷⁸ Usually, it was only when a man died, or relinquished his title upon receiving another, that his previous title became 'free' and could be granted to someone else, as in the case of I'tiqād Khān.

Some titles denoted an exceptionally high status, either by virtue of their meaning or historical associations, e.g. Khān-i Khānān, Amīr-ul Umarā, and Khān-i Jahān; or because nobles who rose to high mansabs and offices, such as Āṣaf Khān, Mahābat Khān and Khān-i Daurān, had held them earlier. Titles of both kinds were coveted; but those of the latter kind were often conferred within the same families as can be seen in the case of Āṣaf Khān and Mahābat Khān.

Members of the royal family were not ordinarily granted titles; they retained their original names. The two exceptions in our period were Khurram, who was given the title of Shāh Jahān by Jahāngīr (J 744), a title retained by him when he became emperor, and Dārā Shukoh, who received the title of Shāh Buland Iqbāl from Shāh Jahān (S. 6160).

Many titles such as Khwāja Jahān, Khān-i Jahān and Daulat Khān were adopted from the Delhi Sultanate; others, of Persian origin, often originally represented office not title, Mīr Jumla being a striking instance of this kind. In most other cases the title seems to have been formed by merely putting an Arabic or Persian noun before the Turkic-Mongol word Khān.

Hindu nobles with hereditary principalities were usually not given titles to replace their names. Designations such as Mahārāja, Rānā, Rāja, Rāo, were however conferred as titular prefixes to the names of ruling chiefs. 'Rāja' was in addition a title which might be granted to high Hindu officials (e.g. Todar Mal), who had no pretensions to being ruling chiefs. Other nobles received titles like Muslim officers: thus Anup Singh received the full titular name, Anī Rai Singh-dalan, from Jahāngīr (J 329).

OFFICIAL TITLES

- Amīn-i dāgh*: An official concerned with the dāgh (brand), i.e. checking the contingents of manṣabdārs. He was therefore presumably a subordinate of the mīr bakhshī; but his position and exact duties (especially in so far as they were different from those of the dārogha-i dāgh) do not appear in our sources.
- Amīn* of a ṣūba: Amīn was a term employed for land-surveyor, later (under Shāh Jahān) for revenue-assessor. But the amīn of the ṣūba under Akbar and Jahāngīr was an official charged with ensuring that the land-revenue was assessed and collected, particularly by jāgīrdārs, in accordance with imperial regulations (I. Habib, Agrarian System, 295).
- Amīn-ul mulk*: Head of the amīns of ṣūbas (s.v.) at the court, and thus charged with ensuring equity and obedience to imperial regulations in the assessment and collection of land-revenue. (Cf. Ibn Hasan, Central Structure, 161).
- 'Arz-i mukarrar* (the second representation): Award of a manṣab, or a cash or land-grant approved by the Emperor orally, resubmitted to him after a certain time; on being confirmed, it was put into effect. The officer placing the earlier orders for confirmation before the Emperor came also to be called 'arz-i-mukarrar (Ibn Hasan, p.293).
- Ātish begī*: Commander of artillery. Apparently the same as mīr-i ātish, s.v. (Cf. Irvine).
- Bakāwal begī*: Styled mīr bakāwal in the 'Ain-i Akbari, ed. Blochmann, I, 53. Superintendent of the imperial kitchen and in charge of purchasing materials for it. (Cf. Moreland in JRAS, 1917, 815 ff.)
- Bakhshī* of ahādīs: The ahādīs were cavalymen directly employed in the Imperial service (designated manṣab-holders of one ahad). Their horses, equipment, etc., were checked and the pay fixed thereon by the bakhshī-i ahādīān, or bakhshī of ahādīs, who in turn worked under the mīr bakhshī (cf. Ibn Hasan, 228–30).
- Bakhshī-i shāgird pesha*: Shāgird-pesha (lit. pupils) was the designation given by Akbar to imperial attendants other than slaves, who were designated chelas (Hindi for pupils) ('Ain-i Akbarī, I, 190). The bakhshī-i shāgird-pesha was thus charged with controlling the attendance and pay of imperial attendants. He too was a subordinate of the mīr bakhshī (Cf. Ibn Hasan, 229).
- Dārogha-i daftar khāna*: Superintendent (dārogha) of the imperial secretariat.
- Dārogha-i dāgh*: Superintendent of the branding (dāgh) establishment, being charged with checking the contingents of manṣabdārs at musters. A subordinate of the mīr bakhshī.
- Dārogha-i dārushshifa*: Superintendent of hospital (dārush-shifa).
- Dārogha-i ikhawwāṣān*: Superintendent of the personal attendants (ikhawwāṣān) of the emperor.
- Dārogha-i peshkash*: Officer in charge of receiving gifts (peshkash) made to the emperor. The term peshkash included ceremonial offerings as well as the levy or annual tribute paid by chiefs and subordinate rulers.
- Dārogha-i shikār*: Superintendent of the imperial hunting establishment.
- Dārogha-i top khāna*: Corresponding to mīr-i ātish (s.v. See Bahār-i 'Ajam, s.v. mīr-i ātish).
- Dīwān-i bayūtāt-i hamrāh-i rikāb*: Bayūtāt means household expenses, but also department of imperial kārkhānas (workshops and stores).
- Hamrāh-i rikāb* (lit. accompanying the stirrup) signified the imperial camp. Hence officer in charge of the accounts of the imperial workshops and stores (Siyāqnāma, 109; Cf. Ibn Hasan, 292).
- Dīwān* or wazīr; wazīr-i kul or dīwān-i kul: Minister in charge of imperial finance, jāgīr assignments and revenue collection.
- Faujdar*: Commandant of a territory, in charge of law and order.
- Karorī*: Revenue-collector of the khālīṣa, the imperial revenue establishment. The karorī was usually a high official with jurisdiction over fairly large areas (originally planned to yield one karor tankas = 2 karor dāms). (Irfan Habib, 275–82).
- Kotwāl-i urdū*: Officer in charge of policing the imperial camp (urdū).
- Mīr-i adl*: Officer appointed to inquire into facts and assist the emperor, or governor, in dispensing justice. Not himself a judge.
- Mīr-i ātish*: Chief of the artillery, cf. ātish-begī, s.v., and dārogha-i top khāna, s.v.
- Mīr-i baḥr*: Officer in charge of imperial boats and ferries (A'in-i Akbari, I, 202). Not precisely Chief Admiral, though in Aurangzeb's time the Siddis of Janjira, who did actually command a fleet of warships, obtained this title (Khāfi Khān II, 224–6).
- Mīr bakhshī*, also bakhshī-i mamālik: In charge of awarding manṣabs and checking manṣabdārs' contingents through the dāgh system; and controller of intelligence.
- Mīr-i 'imārat*: Chief of the imperial building department.
- Mīr munshī*: The chief draftsman of imperial letters, farmāns and documents.
- Mīr-sāmān*, also khān-i sāmān: Imperial steward.
- Muftī-i kul*: Muftī was the title given to a recognized theologian expounding Muslim law on hypothetical cases through opinions (fatwas), which the qāzīs would then apply to specific disputes. Muftī-i kul or the principal muftī held a largely titular office granted to a theologian who issued authoritative fatwas.
- Mushrif-i filkhāna*: Accountant (mushrif) of the elephant stables.
- Mushrif-i maḥal*: Accountant of the imperial palace.
- Mustājir*: Revenue farmer. Not really an imperial official.
- Mustaufi-i mamālik*: Auditor-general of the empire.
- Mutaṣaddī*: General designation for official. But specially applied to the Customer of the Ports of Cambay and Surat.
- Qānūngo* of Sarkār: Qānūngo was the hereditary keeper of revenue accounts, playing a very important role in helping jāgīrdārs or their agents to draw up revenue assessments of parganas (I. Habib, 289–91). Qānūngos were appointed at higher levels (sarkār, ṣūba) as well for the same purpose.
- Qāzī-i 'askar*: Qāzī accompanying the army, to decide cases arising therein.
- Qāzī-i ṣūba*: The qāzī of the capital of a ṣūba. It is not clear whether besides his primary jurisdiction, he had also the power to hear appeals from pargana qāzīs. It is more likely that such appeals went to the nāẓim (governor), and that the qāzī sat in the nāẓim's court in an advisory capacity.
- Qāzī-ul quzzāt* of Jaunpur: The principal qāzī in the region of Jaunpur. Cf. qāzī of ṣūbas, when the ṣūbas were organized, Jaunpur lost its position as the administrative headquarters of a large region, which was divided into the ṣūbas of Awadh and Allahabād, Jaunpur itself going to Allahabād.

Şadr: Şadr was the official entrusted with supervising and recommending revenue and cash grants, as well as recommending the appointment of qāzīs, within a şūba. These officials were later called şadr-i juzv (P. Saran, 340–4; I. Habib, 299). Before the formation of şūbas, the şadrs under the chief şadr at the court were apparently appointed over large areas assigned to them on an ad hoc basis (Cf. qāzī ul quzzāt of Jaunpur).

Şadrus şudur: Imperial minister controlling land and cash grants and appointments of qāzīs.

Shāhbandar: Harbour-master; also officer in charge of ports, other than Cambay and Surat (see Mutaşaddi).

Şiqdār: Revenue-collector; later also used for revenue-official under a jāgīrdār.

Şubedār: This and other designations such as nāzim, hākim, sipahsālār, and şahib-şūba were used for the governor of a şūba.

Tahvildār of artillery: Tahvīl, treasury or cash-in-hand. Tahvildār means treasurer; tahvildār of artillery thus meant the treasurer or cashier of the artillery.

Tahvildār-i jins-i nawāra wa top khāna-i padshāshī: Keeper of the stores of the imperial flotilla and artillery.

Wakīl: Also styled wakīl-i mumlikat. The highest minister at the imperial court, but without any department under him.

Wāqī'a navīs: Official entrusted with sending reports of all public business, and other news. Usually, the office was combined with that of the bakhshī of the şūba, and the official was a subordinate of the mīr bakhshī. He appointed his own agents (gumāshatas).

Note: Most of the manṣabs given above are erroneous and have therefore not been included in the main list. For instance Khān-i Khānan (AJ 5) and Qulij Khān (AJ 6) never reached the rank of 9,000. Neither Jahāngīr's mother, nor for that matter any queen or princess was ever awarded any manṣab whatsoever. The manṣab of 12,000 for the king himself might be a reference to the manṣab held by him as a prince, which was 12,000. The list also suffers from other defects. For instance, there is no mention of Sedris Chan (Idris Khān) AJ17 as a manṣabdār of 5,000 in the contemporary literature of Jahāngīr's reign. Rāi Durga (AJ11) shown as alive in 1611 had died in 1606-7 (J182).

* The portion on which the date was given has been damaged and the date cannot be ascertained. Internal evidence from the documents shows that they were prepared and relate to the year when Baklana was annexed to the Mughal Empire. Since this happened in 1048 A.H., all these documents have been entered for that year.

* The date is illegible. But the document refers to Sādāt Khan as one of the manşabdārs attached to Khān-i Daurān in the Deccan. Khān-i Daurān was the Şubedār of the Deccan in the 18th R.Y. of Shāh Jahān. The date should therefore be the 18th R.Y. of Shāh Jahān.

* In the decennial list Wāriṣ has not mentioned the name of Shaista Khān, Khān-i Jahān but has given the name of Saiyid Khān-i Jahān Bārha and has shown him as alive in 30th R.Y. though Khān-i Jahān Bārha died in 19th R.Y. (No. S3457). There has perhaps been some confusion here, but as it is not established beyond doubt, I have not allotted him a separate number.

Records and Documents including Collectanea

Imperial Farmāns (A.D. 1577-1805) granted to the ancestors of the Tikayat Mahārāj, translations in Hindi, English and Gujarati by K.M. Jhaveri, Bombay, 1929.

Some Firmāns, Sanads and Parwānas (1578-1802), preserved in Bihar, Calendared by K.K. Datta, Patna, 1962.

Farmāns, Manshurs and Nishāns, addressed by the Imperial Mughals to the Princes of Rājasthān; Directorate of Archives, Govt. of Rajasthan, Bikaner.

Records preserved at the Central Record Office (U.P.), Allahabad. The Collection consists of farmāns, sale deeds, gift deeds, mortgage deeds, judgements, etc., and other documents concerning land grants. A few documents belong to the 16th, but most appertain to the 17th and 18th centuries.

The documents preserved at the State Archives, Hyderabad (A.P.). The collection consists of various kinds of documents such as Yaddāshī-i Mulūzimāt, Chahra, Parwānas, Dāgh-o Tashīha, etc. Out of about five thousand documents in this collection, belonging to the reign of Shāh Jahān, which have been used by me, a little less than a hundred and fifty have been printed in the Selected Documents of Shāh Jahān's Reign, ed. Y.H. Khān, Hyderabad, 1950.

Collections of Letters

Abul Fazl, Inshā-i Abul Fazl, ed. Nawal Kishore, Kanpur, 1872.

Khān-i Jahān Saiyid Muzaḥfar Khān Bārha, 'Arzdāshī-ha-i Muzaḥfar, MS. Add. 16,859. This collection also contains the famous letter written by 'Aziz Koka to Jahāngīr heavily criticising the latter.

Balkrishan Barahman, Letters of Shaikh Jalāl Ḥisārī and Balkrishan Barahman, written towards the end of Shāh Jahān's reign and early years of Aurangzeb's reign. MS. Br.M. Add. 16,859.

Aurangzeb, Ādāb-i 'Ālamgīrī, MS. Br.M. Or. 177.

Biographies and Biographical Collections

Shaikh Farid Bhakkari, Zakhīrat-al Khawānīn, Habib Ganj Collection, 32/74, Azād Library, Aligarh Muslim University. I have compared it with Saiyid Moin-ul Haq's edition. Karachi, 1961-74. Moin-ul Haq's edition is based on a defective MS and I have accordingly preferred the Habib Ganj MS throughout. There is some material, however, which is not found in the Habib Ganj MS; for this I have cited the Karachi edition.

Index of Names

Owing to the absence of surnames, entries are arranged according to the initial letters of first names. The first names might be community-designations such as Saiyid and Shaikh; or, titles such as Rāja. Thus Abul Fazl is entered under Shaikh as Shaikh Abul Fazl, and Bīrbal under Rāja as Rāja Bīrbal. The reader should therefore also check under such designations or titles when looking for names.

The index is in three parts, one for each reign. The same abbreviations are used here as in the main work. These are given below by way of reminder:

- A Akbar (reign of)
- AA Appendices A & B to A (continuous serial numbers in both Appendices)
- J Jahāngīr (reign of)
- AJ Appendix to J
- S Shāh Jahān (reign of)

The entry number follows the initial letter which represents each reign.
